It startles one when he comes to know absolutely that wrong selection of food in the direct cause of the weak eyes, kidney trouble, dyspepsia or whatever may be the form disease takes, and that light food will work a natural cure. But it is easy to prove by actual test. The following is an example:

"Five months ago I was in despair, not knowing the cause of my desperate condition. I had run down to 16 pounds and suffered from a chronic sore threat, sore eyes and what was hardst to bear, an awful nervousness and hysteria which at times almost ran into Insanity.

"Finally a large swelling appeared in the throat and I feared cancer. The nervousness got worse and when I found I could stand it no longer and no medicine I could take would cure me, I concluded to take the advice of the Postum Gereal Company and change diet. 4. Roast a lenon in the oven until quite soft. Cut a hole in one end, fill with all the sugar it will hold, and cat pulp and sugar hot, just before going to bed at night. It is also excellent for breaking up a freshly-caught cold.

Will you kindly inform me if there is such a book as "The Man Who Dared?" The play was being played in this city for several weeks. I shall watch your columns for an answer,

1, I desire upon your suggestion to in-sert those questions in the Queen Alex-andra's and the Duchess of Albany's surnames.

2.1 am much interested in the questions and answers of enclosed ellipping about the name "leutenant"—which myself and most English people pronounce as if it was spelt "lettenant." This word is called so in England. I never heard it called otherwise until I came to this country. Most of your words over here are seemingly pronounced as they are spelt.

2. Another word, viz., "patent," we call in English as if spelt "paylent." No doubt you are aware of this, It appears strange to me why the "a" should be pronounced differently on this side—as both countries speak the English language—but you have a different accent here. I have often wished to meet an elocutionist and inquire why these differences exist.

4. Another strange thing is the letter "z," which in English is "zed"—here it is "zee." I hope I am not wearying you in any way, but these are matters I am much interested in.

5. I don't think the dropping of the "h" is general (as surposed) more English.

5. I don't think the dropping of the "h b. I don't imme the dropping of the "n" is general (as supposed) among English people; only the uneducated. F. V. L. I. If any reader knows what the malden surnames of these two royal women were, I shall be glad to inform our English friend to that effect. Yet one might think he would be better posted in this mater than Americans.
2 "Lectenant" is an English proving mater than Americans.

2. "Leftenant" is an English provincialism, copied for nearly two centuries by Americans. I well recollect hearing it from old-fashloned people when I was a child in Virginia. When we learned the meaning of "lieu-tenant," and that "left-tenant" had none, we amended our speech.

3. Our British cousins take many liberties with the first letter of the alphabet. I shall never forget the sort of shock I received when, on giving a MS. to a typewriter to copy, she asked, 'Do you want it to dye,'' Repressing the instant inclination to answer, 'I want it to live!' I said, politely interrogative, 'I beg pardon!' She repeated slowly, out of consideration for Yankee stupidity. 'Do you want it to-dye, or will to-morrow do as well?' In a like manner a coachman patronizingly informed me at the end of a wearlsome journey. 'There is nothing like wyting and pytience when one is traveling a long wye.'

I am not prepared to adopt 'paytent' in place of 'patent,' or to say 'earnt' very broadly instead of 'can't,' with a moderate breadth of 'a.' By the way, why not 'partent' as well as 'carn't'' 4. The old-fashloned people aforementioned said 'zed.' One of the first jokes of my school days was to banter an old gentleman viskor to the schoolroom to spell 'gizzard,' using 'zed' and not 'zee.' Try iii

5. No one who has written of this prenounced dilosyncrasy of the British vernacular has taken any other ground than that the practice of misplacing the 'm' is a sure token of a lack of early education and gentle breeding, It is not a month since an lynglish-born author of some note on both sides of the water boasted of the ability to 'write h'on and ties with the first letter of the alphabet. I shall never forget the sort of shock I month since an implication of the water some note on both sides of the water boasted of the ability to "write h'on and h'on," while many of the craft fainted and fell by the way.

RECIPES.

BAKING POWDER BREAD.

Sift twice into a bowl a quart of flour, a teaspoonful of salt and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Make a hole in the centre of the flour and pour into this a plat of milk and water mixed. Mix with a spoon, and if too stiff to make a soft dough add more water. Sift just long enough to blend thoroughly, then turn into a deep, broad greased breadpan and bake. Do not knead at all.

HOARHOUND CANDY.

Make a ten of hoarhound leaves by covering four tablespoonfuls of the dried leaves with a very little boiling water—a seant teaspoonful should be enough. Set aside until cold, then squeeze out all the fullee or liquid. Put two tablespoonfuls of water to this, and with this liquid wet a pound of brown sugar and put all in a saucepan at the side of the stove, When the sugar is melted add a tablespoonful of lemon juice and boil steadily without touching until a little dropped in cold water is brittle. Turn into greased pans, and when cold and hard break into pieces of the desired size.

Editor of The Times-Dispatch:

Take good, rich cider in any stage preferred. Then put in a kettle: let it come to a boil, and at this point there will be a thick scum to rise to the top; skim this off three or four times; then bottle and cork immediately putting bottle and cork immediately, putting sealing wax over the cork to exclude the air. When cold, lay the bottles on their sides in a cool, dry, dark place. Bottle in pint or quart bottles. If properly sealed, cider prepared in this way will keep for soveral years.

If M. M. J. will send me address and stamp, I will send for some valuable remedies for "asthma."
